ClipMon, now available in its portable form, can instantly remember and clean up all text, image and file clips in the clipboard and insert them into the computer's native text editor. Features include: For text clips, it's possible to open in any text editor and view caption, document name, size, program, and date of modification for each entry. Multiple scripts can be executed for text, like a text-to-speech tool, spellchecker (requires Microsoft Word), encryption and decryption, along with conversion to a numbered or bulleted list. It's possible to edit formatting options for all clips, like increasing or decreasing the indent and text background color customization. Plus, you can search for particular clips using a text search tool. They can be exported to RTF, TXT (regular or Unicode) or HTML format. For image and file clips, they can be opened in the default graphic editor, filtered by creator, as well as zoomed in and out. Information on copied files includes the content (total folders and files in one clip), size and modified date. Similar to text clips, a search function is available for files.
